LSU NCBRT Preparedness Podcast: 74 Election Safety and Security: Preparing for Potential Threats

This is the third episode in our four-part series on election safety and security with guests Tina Barton and Sheriff Justin Smith. On today's episode, they discuss the importance of establishing relationships between election officials, law enforcement, and community stakeholders before an election. They also talk about some of the resources that the Committee for Safe and Secure Election provides for communities and law enforcement. More information on the committee and its resources can be found here: <https://safeelections.org/>. The final episode in our election security and safety series will air on Tuesday, October 17th. LSU NCBRT/ACE is a nationally recognized center for emergency preparedness and response training located at Louisiana State University's flagship campus in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. We provide mobile training to both the national and international emergency response community. Together with our stakeholders, we challenge ourselves each day to influence human safety, security, and resilience in a positive manner.
